Session: “Indonesia Port Outlook 2018”

Indonesia’s vast size stretches over 5,000 kilometers across the equator is made up of over 17,000 islands, which makes the development of an efficient national transport network a serious challenge. Balancing the immediate needs of provinces and regions in terms of funding and facilitating coordination between local governments that determine their own spatial planning and the central government will be the challenge in achieving the nationwide vision. This session will focus on port national priority projects under collaborative development between the central and regional governments, state owned enterprises and private sector industry leaders.

- Upgrading the ports network: modernising the existing port infrastructure and building new ports to deliver greater connectivity between the island
- Increasing the competitiveness of Indonesia's ports sector
- Planning a new regional port network for Eastern Indonesia
 - Creating greater operational efficiency within the existing port network
 - Tackling logistical challenges to development of a successful and efficient port network:
- Optimising shipping procedures and lowering logistical costs
- Speeding up import and export services
